Henry Wilson Elementary School
McDonough Elementary School
Parker-Varney Elementary School

Every 26 seconds in America, a student drops out of school. This adds up to more than 1 million students – a group roughly equivalent to the size of the population of Dallas, Texas – leaving school every year. Half these dropouts come from just 10 percent of schools.

City Year places AmeriCorps members in some of our nation's highest-need schools. Our model, Whole School Whole Child, is based on research that suggests students most at risk of dropping out can be identified as early as elementary school. Corps members work with teachers and principals to identify students who need extra care and attention, and focus on the ABCs – attendance, behavior and course performance in math and English – to help students stay in school and on track to succeed.

This year, 2,500 corps members will serve 150,000 students in grades 3 through 9 at 247 schools in 24 cities across the country. These full-time, professionally trained young adults tutor students one-on-one, provide additional support for teachers in classrooms, and coordinate programs and activities that benefit the whole school.
